Measuring Global Knowledge

Center for Academic Mobility Research

The Institute of International Education's Center for Academic Mobility Research brings together the Institute's in-house research expertise and leading minds from around the world to conduct and disseminate timely and relevant research and analysis in the field of international student and faculty mobility. The Center provides applied research and program evaluation services to domestic and international governmental agencies, non-governmental organizations, corporations and foundations. The Center's in-depth books and reports, including the Open Doors Report on International Educational Exchange, supported by the U.S. Department of State, are key reference resources. In addition, our policy papers and snapshot surveys rapidly capture trends in the changing landscape of international education.

What We Do

- Drive Policy and Program Decisions through Applied Research and Analysis
  We conduct longitudinal and snapshot research on the global mobility of students and faculty as well as offer a comprehensive suite of research and program evaluation services.
- Foster and Disseminate Knowledge
  We offer a range of in-depth and rapid-response publications, while participating in global conferences and hosting roundtable discussions that bring together thought leaders on key topics in international education and global mobility.
- Train the Next Generation of Mobility Researchers
  We host a year-round internship program and provide workshops and training to researchers, governmental agencies and higher education institutions globally to strengthen and develop mobility research expertise.
