On Track

Exploring higher education in the US, finding the appropriate information, finding the right program for you, inquiring about scholarship opportunities, all these can sound overwhelming, but many students can take advantage of the resources they have at hand. Manuel Castro Rocha did just that. Of rather shy approach, but very polite, Manuel shared his story with us. While studying English at CCNN, the binational center in Nicaragua, he attended a presentation promoting US studies during International Education Week. Having obtained English language skills, he set out to look for graduate programs on Information Technology Management, application procedures, and ways to fund his master's degree. He is currently one of the finalists to obtain funding from the Fulbright program. "I am very fortunate, but getting the information from an Advising center was a great help", Castro said. Many students find their way through and reach their academic goals with hard work, but most of all dedication.
